Training for Middle Level Managers and Leaders of PSUs/PSEs/MNCs

PSUs in India have largely been on the right track in leading economic growth as well as in their social function of nation-building. But some of the serious challenges that have hounded PSUs over the years pertain to heavy losses, overstaffing, poor leadership pipeline, unsatisfactory industrial relations, lack of motivation and political interference. However, today, PSUs are going through exciting changes in their environment, with a range of new opportunities and challenges as the Indian economy integrates with the global markets. Today, being profitable is the most important goal and that is only possible through good performance. It is the organization's people who drive the performance and they need to be world class, highly skilled and engaged with the organization.

The challenges that confront the HR departments in PSUs are therefore similar to their counterparts in private sectors, although somewhat uniquely placed. There are however certain common denominators. Capability and skill building, along with access to opportunities and recognition is what the young generation workforce wants more than anything else. Certainly the salary package and job security aspect still hold importance, but are far from sufficient in building loyalty or engagement. The organization's commitment to providing exposure, training and developing its employees is indeed the key differentiator for youngsters. This investment will sharpen the saw, which will be critical in raising the performance bar for PSEs.

Cutting edge technological disruptions and automation are fast transforming the kind of skills that are and will be in demand. With globalization and economic fluctuations constantly changing the way businesses function and the industry operates, along with the inclusion of a younger workforce, organizations are increasingly vouching for adopting HR practices that enable them to achieve superior performance through its 'people'. This is also validated by the fact that HR's relevance now depends on its ability to lead organizations from the front and in keeping up and staying agile in a world that offers unlimited possibilities.
