INTRODUCTION

Women empowerment has long been a centre of attraction of the Government of India for promotion of micro enterprises particularly to create livelihood opportunities for rural poor. One of the key instruments for women’s empowerment is Self-Help Groups (SHGs). Every state of India is contributing significantly in mainstreaming this approach to the extent of financing programmes for promoting self-help groups.

Self-help groups are generally facilitated by NGOs, who advise and train members in a variety of on- and off-farm income-generating activities. Indeed, recent times it has been seen that NGOs were substituted by trained facilitators and animators drawn from either Government body or any other State level agencies, who promotes SHGs or the senior members of SHGs themselves.

Many Self Help Groups are functioning successfully across the country and promotion and strengthening of SHGs has become an integral part in community development and self employment programmes. At the same time one can understand that income generation is the goal of any commercial activity pursued through own or borrowed funds. Any activity that does not generate income out of the invested funds is to be considered as unproductive activity. It is also true that unproductive activities also create assets and the same may generate income if use appropriately. But the real test of income generation lies in leaving sufficient surplus of income over expenditure.

Field level organizers and supervisory officials engaged in promotion of SHGs and micro enterprises are required to possess conceptual clarity of approach and appropriate monitoring skills to ensure sustainable enterprises.

In view of the above, having five decades of experience in training and research, ni-msme propose above Training Programme, which is designed to touch upon all the facets of Micro Enterprise activity through Self Hel Groups and is intended to equip the participants with professional skills in Formation of SHGs, Identification of Viable Enterprises, Formulation of Projects along with its appraisal techniques.
