INTRODUCTION

The Indian food processing sector has 1.3 billion potential customers and is among the fastest growing economies in the world. Globally India is ranked first in several agri- commodities and second in total food production. In India, vegetable and fruit processing is almost uniformly divided between unorganized and organized sectors. Unorganized sector, which includes a number of traditional and modern food units, takes over a majority of market share in Indian food processing market as compared to the organized sector that holds a share of 42 %. While products such as pulp and juice concentrate are primarily produced by the organized sector, unorganized sector has a strong foothold in traditional areas including items such as pickles, squashes and sauces. In this, pickles form strongest category by size. The policymakers have identified food processing as a key sector in encouraging labour movement from agriculture to manufacturing.
